

TOP FIVE SONGWRITING TIPS

There is no right or wrong way to begin the songwriting process, but these top tips offer a good starting point.

1. MAKE IT MATTER

Choose a topic that matters to you so you can perform it with passion. This could be from personal experience, your hopes, fears and dreams, or something topical from the news. Your choice of instrument, tempo and lyrics should complement the mood of your theme.

2. START WITH A MIND MAP

Grab a plain sheet of paper, put your topic or title in the middle, then scribble down your thoughts, feelings and observations. Use a thesaurus to expand your options and get inspired by words which rhyme or subtly sound alike such as 'fireflies' and 'paradise'.

3. HONE YOUR SONG STRUCTURE

Balance repetition and variety by trying out the popular VERSE / CHORUS / VERSE / CHORUS / BRIDGE / CHORUS song structure. Verses have the same melody, different lyrics and give details. A chorus repeats lyrics which sum up the theme of the song. The bridge is often in a different key, and can introduce a revealing moment. Most radio songs are a maximum of 3 minutes 20 seconds.

4. TIE YOUR LYRICS & MELODY TOGETHER

Tackle lyrics and melody in any order. Keep lyrics simple to start with and then add interest through sounds and word flow as in the Thin Lizzy song, With Love: "I must confess that in my quest I felt depressed and restless". Melody-wise, work out what key signature your song is in and play about with notes from that scale. Google relevant chord patterns to ensure you don't get any unpleasant clashing sounds.

5. ON TO THE FINISH LINE

Try not to be too critical or abandon a song part-way through or you'll never finish. You're nearly there. Once complete, get your song out there. Upload it or share it in person with family and friends and don't be afraid to ask for feedback - that's how you'll progress.
